Glamis Recreation Area

The Glamis Sand Dunes, part of the Imperial Sand Dunes Recreation Area, are located southeast of the Salton Sea in southern California at the border with Arizona.

The Imperial Sand Dunes are the most popular off-road destination in Southern California. Since the annual rain fall is less than 2", the only winter hazard is blowing sand. Winter temperatures are typically in the 60-70° range.

The Imperial Sand Dunes are the largest mass of sand dunes in California at approximately 45 miles long and 6 miles wide with over 118,000 acres of land. OHV activities are permitted on some of the sand dunes, while other areas are permanently or temporarily closed. Vehicle camping is permitted in all areas open to vehicle use, with sites available on a first-come, first-served basis. However, a camping permit is required upon arrival.

The United States Bureau of Land Management estimates that over 1.4 million visitors come to these sand dunes each year for day-use riding or to camp over weekends and ride in the dunes. Hundreds of thousands of visitors arrive on various holiday weekends, often grouping in popular areas during specific times of the day, such as Oldsmobile Hill and Gecko Road.

South Dunes Recreation Area

The area of the Imperial Sand Dunes closest to Yuma is known as the South Dunes Recreation Area or Buttercup Valley. This area extends from the New Coachella Canal to the Arizona/California border.

Season permits run from October 1 through September 30 of the next year. Permits are available for a seven-day period or for the season. They are required for special events or filming and "primary vehicles", meaning the street-legal vehicle that gets you here,

The South Dunes area is home to the historic Plank Road, which served as the first direct route through the sand dunes from San Diego, to Yuma. Constructed in 1915, parts of this road still remain among the drifting sands of the dunes. The Plank Road symbolized the adventurous spirit of the Wild West that lives on in the outdoor enthusiasts who come to visit the Imperial Sand Dunes.

In addition to recreation, the picturesque sands of the Imperial Sand Dunes have been used as a backdrop in films since 1913. Pictures have been made here in every decade since, including "Star Wars" and, more recently, "Jarhead."

Things to Do and See

The Imperial Sand Dunes may seem desolate on the surface, but that doesn't mean you won't be able to find what you need. All you need to know is where to look.

Be it a wildlife lookout point, a part for your sand toy, a little piece of history, or a bite to eat, chances are, you'll find it tucked away in the dunes. Here are a few suggestions to check out the next time you're out there.

Vendor Row

Did that last launch off the top of Competition Hill snap something vital in your undercarriage? There's a chance you might be able to fix it on scene, thanks to the businesses along Vendor Row. From flags and parts to glow sticks and clothing, Vendor Row offers something for every duner.

Duner's Diner

Whether you are looking for a refreshing drink at the bar, a delicious breakfast or extra oil for your buggy, Duners Diner has it all. This watering hole is known for its outdoor eating area, which features a unique cami-netting cover to keep you in the shade on those warm dune days. It's located West of the Gordons Well exit on I-8. At the "T", go left (west). 6626 US HIGHWAY 80. (760) 572-5332.

Boardmanville

The Boardmanville Trading Post looks a little like something you might see in a Crocodile Dundee movie in the Australian Outback. It is a little off the beaten path but duners know its where you can find a cold beverage and a place to take a rest from riding. It's located East of Wash 10 off Ted Kipf Road. (760) 351-0073. GPS: 32° 59.14 N / 115° 02.06 W

The Plank Road

The Plank Road is a small remnant of the unique "floating" wooden road that ran along the southern end of the Imperial Sand Dunes. The old plank road was constructed in 1915 in an effort to create a more direct route from Yuma to San Diego. It was in use until 1926, when the California Highway Commission constructed a paved road (Highway 80) as a permanent solution to maintenance and traffic problems the Plank Road posed. From BLM.gov

True or False? You decide ...

Locals have said for years - well, since World War II anyway - that famed Gen. George S. Patton buried a bunch of supplies out in the dunes. It's said that Patton wanted to prepare for a West Coast attack upon the country. In case that happened, Patton supposedly wanted to have some Jeeps and tanks available for deployment - after digging them back up, of course. One valley near Gordon's Well is named after the general, who did train troops in the area, according to the Bureau of Land Management.
